In announcing its production, Mr. Devenport begs to draw the attention of all interested in the great social problems of the day to the moral lesson taught by "THE NEW MAGDALEN." It is now generally admitted by Press and Public that the Author has treated a topic of world-wide human interest in a manner so delicate and yet so powerful as to awaken deep and general sympathy. None can watch the development of this story without feeling mingled pity and admiration for its unfortunate heroine, the victim of society's hard laws. A noble yet erring nature is here depicted in its gradual progress through the purifying fires of remorse and suffering, to the rest and shelter afforded by a religion of MERCY and LOVE.
